What the Papers Say

It is interesting to read the comments of the various papers throughout the United States on the big fine assessed against the Standard Oil company by Judge Landis, of Illinois, recently.

Almost without exception, the papers treat the matter as though they were surprised and most of them are now speculating as to whether or not the fine can be made to stick.

It certainly shows a lack of faith in the courts of our country, but apparently the papers are of the opinion that such a fine—no matter if it were made—could not be made to hold good upon appeal.

This naturally raises the inquiry, Does the Standard own the courts too? The Kansas City Times, in commenting upon this fine, however, expresses the opinion that the fine will hold good and that if the case is taken to the highest court in the land, Judge Landis will be sustained.

At the same time, the paper in question, devotes considerable space in arguments to convince itself and its readers that such will really be the outcome.

The Times' editorial is well worth reading. The pitiful attempts to show that the courts of this country are really not afraid of Standard Oil is enough to arouse the ire of every self-respecting citizen in the country.

But perhaps the Times is right when it says: "Under no circumstances is it conceivable that the fine imposed upon the Standard Oil company by Judge Landis can become futile or abortive. It is believed that the decree of Judge Landis will be affirmed, on appeal, and that the Standard will be compelled to pay the very large sum assessed against it. But even if the fine, through any possible action of the higher courts, should fail, the results of the Chicago action would not fall to the ground. A judgment from a magistrate of the government asserting the equality before the law of the richest corporation on the globe, with the humblest offender, cannot prove barren of effects thoroughly salutary to society."

"All of the figures that have been printed showing the bloated profits of Standard Oil may be considered lame and impotent in their influence on the public mind, in comparison with the force with which the colossal fine named by Judge Landis will appeal to the people. Never before has the public acquired such a clear conception of the real enormity of the Standard's system of robbery as this judgment against the Rockefeller corporation has created. It will take hold of the intelligence of the country with a grip that nothing will be able to weaken."

"The fearful and unbelieving are on hand with the familiar plea that fines amount to nothing to a corporation like the Standard; that its profits render even 29 million dollars a mere bagatelle; that anything which the company may be compelled to pay can be speedily made good by the accustomed advance in the price of its products."

"Well, the payment of money in any sum with which it is compelled to part is as great a trial to the Standard as it is to any struggling firm or individual. The abnormal lust for gain which stands confessed in the conscienceless methods of the Standard can mean only actual anguish over its relinquishment. As to the Standard's tactics for recouping its losses, that game has been played to the limit. It has reached the danger line. If the Standard resorts to that policy in this case it will be at its own risk."

"If the fine assessed against the Standard by Judge Landis means anything it certainly and inevitably foreshadows the beginning of the end for the incredibly wicked and predatory institution known as Standard Oil."

Heredity

"We are all," said Oliver Wendell Holmes, "omnibuses in which our ancestors are riding."

Heredity, this means; that sometimes a man gets his blue eyes from his mother, and his quarrelsome disposition from his grandfather, and his laziness from his great-grandfather.

Heredity is a mysterious thing. No man can be certain how much of his natural disposition is the result of the life of his great-grandfather on his mother's side. He can be pretty sure that some of it is.

People have been known to lay their weaknesses on heredity. "I wasn't born to work hard," says one man, "because all my people were rich once, and none of them ever worked before." "You must excuse Johnny's bad temper," a boy's mother explains; "you see, he gets it from his grandfather." "I know I'm extravagant," confesses the wife of a poor man, "but I can't help it; it runs in the family."

We are the result of all who have lived before us, not only of our immediate ancestors, but of all of humanity. From the moment of his birth, man's conceptions of life, the world, duty, pleasure, love—everything, are according as the whole world has lived and progressed and sacrificed and enjoyed and loved. There was not an act in the French revolution, not a privation suffered by the early colonists, not a thought in the streets of ancient Rome that has not left its mark, small or great, upon the world as it presents itself to us today.

There are millions of people riding in us besides our ancestors.

But because they killed in France, we do not kill today. We are not strong in adversity just because our forefathers were brave in the trackless wilderness. We are not limited in our thought by what they thought in old Rome.

We never consider old Rome, or the French revolution or the early colonists.

Let your ancestors ride if they like. If your respect for women comes from your mother, be thankful that you had such a mother. But if one of your grandfathers couldn't control himself, and another was too fond of his bottle, and one great-grandfather was selfish, and a great-grandmother was a little too vain, and it seems to you that you must have been bequeathed all sorts of other weaknesses and objectionable traits by a host of ancestors, then the only thing for you is to say, very respectfully, "Grandfather and grandmother and the rest of you, you are riding in my omnibus, and I'm glad to have you; but I've got my own life to live and my own character to make, and if you can't help me why then you'll have to get out."

CURRY IS INAUGURATED GOVERNOR IN MIDST OF BRILLIANT ASSEMBLY

Will Aid Investigations.
"I will render all possible assistance to any legitimate investigations which may be in progress at present or which may be instituted from time to time. I have not yet consulted with the assistant attorney general of the United States, who is here at present, but I expect to hold a consultation with him before the end of the week."

Pleased With Reception.
"I am greatly pleased with the reception given me by the people of New Mexico everywhere I have been, especially so upon the occasion of my inauguration. I particularly appreciate the efforts made by my old friends to be present upon this occasion, but the thing I appreciate probably more than all else is the confidence shown in me generally by the people of the territory wherever I have talked with them."

POSSIBLE CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION

Santa Fe, August 8.—(Special).—There are many rumors here today as to the appointments under Governor Curry. It is understood there will be changes in the federal and territorial officials under Curry's administration, but the governor's announcement that he would not act hastily has served to put a damper on many of the stories being circulated.

It is stated that the position of attorney general, now held by George W. Prichard, will be tendered to Judge A. B. Hall of Otero county, and that the latter for the sake of aiding the Curry administration, will accept. In this event, however, Judge Hall will not become a permanent resident of Santa Fe, but will be represented according to law, by an assistant attorney general.

Captain David J. Leahy, present assistant United States attorney, of El Paso, is one of those mentioned in connection with this place. It is not known whether he would look upon the proposition with favor, or not. W. B. Childers and E. W. Dabson, of Albuquerque, are also mentioned. It is also stated that Nathan Jara, of Roswell, will succeed J. W. Reynolds as territorial secretary. This rumor is being persisted and is generally believed. The change, however, will not take place for some time.

President's Personal Representative.
It is understood that the president is to have a personal report on the sentiment in this territory as shown at the inauguration of Gov. Curry. The man, whom it is stated will make such a report is Frank Hitchcock, first assistant postmaster general, who arrived in the city yesterday afternoon and quietly began making about.

His presence in the city was not learned until noon today, but by that time Mr. Hitchcock no doubt had all the information he desired. Mr. Hitchcock will probably visit Albuquerque before the end of the week and also later other points in New Mexico. He does not announce the object of his visit here but it is generally reported that it is here for the purpose above mentioned.
